Development and testing of a concept to cover costs for the recognition of qualifications

Recognising foreign professional qualifications can be quite a costly endeavour. Lack of funds may keep well-qualified individuals from applying for credentials recognition or lead them to withdraw applications already made. If the recognition of credentials is refused, their chances on the job market are reduced. This means that their potential is being kept from society.

The grants offered under this programme help those with only limited financial resources seek recognition of their foreign qualifications. In the pilot project, f-bb has developed, tested, and analysed processes and structures for implementing the funding project. During the trial phase, f-bb has been tasked with determining whether and to what extent the procedure can be converted into a regular offering.
